SATURDAY EVENING, JULY 7.

American Gentlemen.

I never reflect upon the breadth and generosity of the underlying idea of our system of government, with all its manly equities, its constant demand upon its citizens for the most elevated sentiments known to our nature, and the opportunities afforded for their exercise, that it does not appear to me more and more, and beyond all other forms of government yet devised, the most favorable theatre for the exercise of all the qualities that dignify and adorumankind, and that if penetrated with a true sense of the part which each man among us should bear in such a plan, an American citizen ought to be in the best sense of the word a gentleman. I have had good reason to realize the exact-ing nature of the toil and varied occupation of our busy struggle in American life, and amid what a rush of events we have been carving civilization out of the wilderness, emulating with hot impatience the results and accumulations of centuries of work and thought in the older nations. The graces of life-those fruits of repose and well-carned wealth and leisurcare of gradual growth and have been necessarily postponed until our temple of civil and religious liberty was erected upon secure founds.

tions and our grand experiment of self-control by a free people shall have been well tested. Art, its studies and higher influences I do not underrate, and the great advantages it can impart to its disciples, but personal contact has taught me how much of that true refinement, delicacy of sentiment and sensitive considera-tion for the feelings of others, which we justly regard as the best fruit of high breeding and culture, can and does exist in the simplicity of American society, uninstructed even by that European example which to some of our countrymen seems the necessary imprimator of social success. The American snob has none of the induce ments or excuses of his British brother, and when he follows in his track and gilds and veneers his pettiness and vulgarity in imitation of rank and distinguished station, he sins more against nature and the honest simplicity and natural dignity which are akin to republican institutions, and which may well be worn by every man who lives under them, according to their true and manly spirit.

It is in our power to create a standard of American character and manhood as lofty as that of any age or nation, and to compel our representatives at home and abroad to conform their conduct to it. The spirit of true chivalry in all is gentleness and unselfishness, showing ten derness to the feeble and resistance to the over-bearing, mercy to whom mercy is due, and honor to whom honor is due, can and does exist in America to-day, under the "hodden gray" of the laborer and mechanic and threadbare coat of the clerk or the grave garb of the hardworked merchant or man of the profession, as truly as it ever did under the helmet and chain armor of a knight-errant in the olden time. The American people can justly demand from those who are delegated to represent them abroad or at home a punctilious observance of honor and delicate pride in their private and public conduct, and the moral influence to be obtained by dignified self respect, intelligence and high personal integrity will far outweigh any attempted competition with the show and glitter of the representatives of other governments not based upon the principle of volugtary and orderly self control. In truth, it will be found that where American representatives abroad have drawn oblequy and just censure or contempt upon themselves or their country, it has been usually caused by some ignorant attempt at ostentatious display or the unworthy pursuit of private gain, in both of which the dignity of their position was forgotten or disregarded, and the fault was not "Americanism," but the absence of it. - Senator Bayard's Address at Harvard.

Drowning the Doos .- The dog pound to day is a great attraction to crowds of idle boys and many who are always eager to be present at the taking of life, whether it be beast or human. The interior of the pound itself is not an inviting place. It is already very filthy, and this together with the cilluvium emanating from the mangy curs, makes it an undesirable place to loiter in. The din, too, of the howling brutes, who seem to anticipate their doom, is deafening.

Besides the professional dog-slayers. Mr. Bergh's assistants and reporters were all who were allowed to be present at the executions, which commenced at five o'clock this morning.

From thirty to forty dogs are placed in the iron cage at one time, and it is then run out to a derrick, by the water's edge. A running tackle is attached, the cage is let down into the water.

and all is over. The dogs appear to appreciate the position. As soon as the cage is awinging in the air, they all become silent. As it touches the water, each tries to get his head through the After being under water for a minute or loss, the bubbles make the water boil, and this is followed by rising froth, but the poor animals can be seen struggling for as much as four minutes before they become quiet. They are allowed to remain under water ten minutes, when they are hoisted out and thrown in a pile in one corner of the yard. Up to noon 768 had been admitted, and 267 drowned. One little white fellow, after having been un der water full two minutes, where his struggles could be plainly seen, forced his way through the bars of the cage, and coming to the sur-face, awam off to some men who were in a yawi out in the river, by whom he was taken on board. Sixteen of the animals had been redeemed. There was waiting on the outside ten wagon loads, which were admitted as soon as the drown ing process thinned out the kennels. A very large porportion of the dogs were Spitz, and among the crowd they had no friends. Maledictions were hurled upon them from the pipping small boy to the deep bass of the men. Inside the building, on the floor, lay a huge slut with a large litter of pups, all of whom were destined to the dogs' paradise. Mr. Bergh's men are very active, and will not allow any act of appellances of the state o cruelty, such as striking or kicking the dogs. A number of additional men have been bitten, but none of them appear to feel any anxiety about the matter. - N. Y. News. TO THE CONSERVATIVE VOTERS OF FAIRFAX COUNTY.
